Council will review legislative proposals

Proposed legislation for the 1989 Convention and future changes in the Association's legislative procedures are among the major topics on the agenda for the NCAA Council's October 10-12 meeting in Kansas City, Missouri.

The fall meeting affords the Council its final opportunity to agree to sponsor legislation for the January Convention.

The group also will decide what type of alternative legislative calendar to propose for future years, reviewing three different extended calendars. In that same discussion, the Council will decide whether to propose that voting Conventions be held only every other year and whether to increase the number of sponsors required for amendments and amendments to amendments.

In addition, the Council Subcommittee on Incorporation of Interpretations and Legislation in the NCAA Manual will suggest a system for such incorporation in the future.

In other major items on the agenda, the Council will receive a report on the fall meeting of the NCAA Presidents Commission and will appoint individuals to fill vacancies on the Association's standing committees, effective September 1, 1989.

Also on the agenda for the meeting at Kansas City's Marriott Plaza Hotel:

- Reports from the following standing committees: Academic Requirements, Financial Aid and Amateurism, Infractions, Recruiting, Review and Planning, and Special Events.

- Reports from the Special Committee on Deregulation and Rules

Simplification, the Special Council Subcommittee on Bylaw 5-1-(j) Exceptions, and the Special Council Subcommittee to Review the Recruiting Process, in addition to the subcommittee on incorporating material in the Manual.

- Discussion of establishing a standing student-athlete advisory committee.

- The quarterly review of Administrative Committee actions, membership and classification matters, Convention planning, and interpretations.

The Divisions I and III Steering Committees also have division-specific issues on their separate agendas, including these:

- Division I: Results of a survey of the Division I membership regarding the numbers of coaches and administrative support personnel in athletics departments in that division.

- Division III: Consideration of various aspects of the division's financial aid legislation, plus a review of NCAA sports committee sizes, representation and duties in relation to the numbers of member institutions participating in NCAA championships.

In conjunction with the Council's fall meeting, the Administrative Committee and the Nominating Committee will conduct meetings October 9, the former meeting in late afternoon and the latter during the evening.

Highlights of the Council meeting will appear in the October 17 issue of The NCAA News, and a listing of all formal actions taken will be presented in the October 31 issue.

Commissioners get NCAA briefing

With the aim of better serving their respective memberships, the Collegiate Commissioners Association and the University Commissioners Association were given a briefing on NCAA activities and programs during their joint meeting September 28-29 in Kansas City, Missouri.

Members of the NCAA national office staff and others reported to the commissioners on a wide range of Association activities—from compliance and enforcement to drug testing, the NCAA Manual revision project and the Association's scholarship programs.

Association president Wilford S. Bailey brought the commissioners up-to-date on the manual revision project. A series of articles concerning the new Manual will begin late this month in The NCAA News.

NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz reported on Association activities in general and told the commissioners that their role in membership structure and governance is vital to the overall well-being of the Association.

Fred Jacoby, commissioner of the Southwest Athletic Conference, gave a status report on the National Letter of Intent Program, which is administered by the Collegiate Commissioners Association. There were no significant changes in that program.

Thomas E. Yeager, commissioner of the Colonial Athletic Association, summarized the activities of the Legislation and Interpretations Committee, which was established by the membership at the 1987 Convention in San Diego.

Other reports to the commissioners included the following:

- The Division I Men's Basketball Championship, Cedric W. Dempsey, athletics director at the University of Arizona and chair of the Division I Men's Basketball Committee.

- The conference grant program, NCAA scholarship programs, and the new women's and ethnic-minority enhancement program, Merrily Dean Baker, assistant executive director. See Commissioners, page 13

Commission considering financial aid changes

The NCAA Presidents Commission has decided that it supports in principle the changes in the Association's financial aid legislation that have been developed by Lehigh University President Peter Likins—but it wants to continue to work on the details of the proposals.

Meeting September 27-28 in Kansas City, Missouri, the Commission spent the bulk of its time on financial aid discussions and on the governance proposal presented at the June National Forum by University of Vermont President Lattie F. Coor.

Financial aid

The Commission voted to endorse the objectives of Likins' proposal, which would permit each NCAA division and subdivision to act separately on financial aid issues.

Envisioned in the proposal is the opportunity for each division and subdivision to decide if it wants some or all of its sports to offer full grants-in-aid, or basic educational expenses (tuition, fees and books only) based on athletics ability and all other aid on demonstrated need, or all aid based on need.

The Commission emphasized that its executive committee (the elected Commission officers) will continue See Commission, page 2

"A major element of every athletics department budget in Divisions I and II is committed to financial aid, and almost everyone's budget is getting squeezed."

Injury-rate data released by NCAA

Football and women's gymnastics, among the sports with the highest incidence of injuries, showed slight declines in injury rates in 1987-88, according to the NCAA Injury Surveillance System.

The study also found a minor decrease in the overall injury rates from the previous season in the sports of baseball, women's lacrosse, men's soccer and women's softball.

There was a slight increase in the overall injury rates for the sports of field hockey, men's gymnastics, men's ice hockey, women's soccer, women's volleyball and wrestling.

The NCAA Injury Surveillance System was developed in 1982 to provide current and reliable information on injury trends in intercollegiate athletics, using data from a See Injury-rate, page 2 representative sample of member institutions.

The sample is based on all three divisions and on four geographical regions, with participating institutions composing at least 10 percent of the total of member institutions sponsoring each sport.

The Committee on Competitive Safeguards and Medical Aspects of Sports reviews the findings in an attempt to reduce injury rates through suggested changes in rules, protective equipment or coaching techniques.

After collecting information only on the sport of football in its first year, the study added five sports in 1983 and has expanded steadily since. The system examined 13 sports during the 1987-88 academic year, and men's and women's basketball are being studied for the first time this year.

The study of football again revealed a higher incidence of injury on artificial surfaces than on natural grass. The difference has decreased, however, from a rate almost 85 percent higher on artificial turf than on grass in 1982 to a 16 percent difference, not considered statistically significant, in 1987.

Participating institutions reported 5.43 injuries per 1,000 athlete exposures in football, the lowest rate in the six years of the study. Football injury rates have declined slightly in each of the last four seasons.

An athlete exposure is the participation of one student-athlete in one practice or contest in which he or she is exposed to the possibility of athletics injury.

The greatest rates of injury over the course of the study have been in wrestling, women's soccer and men's soccer, followed by women's gymnastics, football and men's lacrosse. Baseball and women's lacrosse showed the lowest rates of injury, with fewer than four incidences per 1,000 exposures.

Wrestling returned to a level of more than 10 injuries per 1,000 exposures after a drop to 8.30 in 1986-87.

A two-year compilation also found wrestling and baseball to be on the extreme ends of the range of injury rates in practice situations.

The committee, however, said it recognizes the variance in intensity of practices across sports. For example, wrestlers participate in frequent and strenuous workouts to work on the specific details of the program and the final drafting of implementing legislation and will take final action on submitting the proposal by the November 1 legislation-submission deadline.

In the interim, members of the Commission will discuss the proposal with individuals on their campuses and in their conferences in order to assess reactions to the concept from various constituencies. The NCAA Council also will discuss the matter in its October meeting, as will the Division I-A Directors Association in its meeting later this month.

Governance

The Commission voted to pursue a change in the Association's governance process by requesting NCAA funding for a study of that process, including Coor's June Forum presentation as a part of that study.

Coor's approach would differentiate between policy issues and implementation legislation, and it would provide a special voting session in which presidents and chancellors (or their specifically designated representatives for that purpose) would take action on the policy issues.

The Commission authorized its executive committee to consult with the NCAA Administrative Committee regarding the appointment of an advisory committee that would direct the study and that would determine the type of advice that it might need in that regard, including the possible use of consultants.

Chancellor Martin A. Massengale of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, chair of the Commission, indicated that such an advisory committee would be appointed as soon as possible.

The Commission's recommendation of a study means that the Coor proposal will not be presented to the January 1989 Convention.

Other actions

The Commission received a report on the NCAA's ethnic-minority enhancement program, presented by President Raymond M. Burse, Kentucky State University, chair of the NCAA Council Subcommittee to Review Minority Opportunities in Intercollegiate Athletics.

The Commission strongly endorsed the subcommittee's work and agreed to urge chief executive officers at all NCAA member institutions to evaluate the athletics opportunities for minorities on their campuses and in their conferences.

The Commission's executive committee met with the NCAA Administrative Committee after the Commission meeting adjourned September 28 to report on the Commission's actions and discuss other issues in college athletics. It was the second in-person meeting of the two groups in 1988.

The Commission reviewed a compilation of all suggestions from the first three sessions of the National Forum and chose not to pursue any of them now except for the financial aid and governance issues.

The group adopted by acclamation a resolution of appreciation to Presidents Likins and Coor for their efforts in developing the financial aid and governance proposals.

It agreed to consider in a future meeting means by which the Commission might support chief executive officers who take proper and effective, but perhaps unpopular, actions in athletics matters on their campuses. It also agreed to discuss the role of the institutional governing board in athletics issues.

It authorized its executive committee to take final action on behalf of the Commission on all legislative issues for the 1989 Convention, including identification of roll-call votes and placement of proposals in the Convention agenda.

The Commission's Division III subcommittee, in a separate session, requested a study to determine the undergraduate enrollments of the institutions winning Division III national championships in all sports in recent years. It also suggested continuing consideration of conducting regional, rather than national, championships in Division III.

Committee Notices

Member institutions are invited to submit nominations to fill interim vacancies on NCAA committees. Nominations to fill the following vacancies must be received by Fannie B. Vaughan, executive assistant, in the NCAA office no later than October 18, 1988.

Women's Basketball Rules: Replacement for Lynne C. Agee, University of North Carolina, Greensboro. Agee's position on the committee is earmarked for Division III, and the University of North Carolina, Greensboro, was reclassified as Division II effective September 1, 1988. Appointee must be a Division III women's basketball representative from District 3.

Also, replacement for Leigh Donato, resigned from Bryn Mawr College. Appointee must be a Division III women's basketball representative.

Legislative Assistance

1988 Column No. 34

NCAA Bylaw 3-3(b)—playing and practice seasons

The NCAA Legislation and Interpretations Committee recently confirmed a previous interpretation (reference: Item No. 5 of the minutes of the committee's November 18, 1987, conference) that a member institution must complete all of its contests played during a nontraditional segment in the fall by January 1 of the academic year involved. Conversely, if a sport has a traditional segment conducted during the fall term, the institution would not be permitted to participate in a contest during its nontraditional segment until after January 1. The committee noted that these restrictions would not preclude the completion of permissible practice activities in either segment after January 1.

NCAA Case No. 215—basketball camps

The Legislation and Interpretations Committee recently agreed that the provisions of Case No. 215 would permit a member institution's basketball coach to serve as a guest lecturer at an invitational camp, coaching school or clinic when high school seniors are in attendance, provided the seniors participate in no physical activities while the coach is present.

NCAA Case No. 245—Division III playing and practice seasons

The NCAA Division III Steering Committee recently confirmed that the preseason conditioning program in basketball provided for in Case No. 245 must be included in the 21-week playing and practice season.

NCAA Bylaw 6-8—squad lists

Divisions I and II member institutions should note that when computing countable financial aid for all student-athletes specified on Form 88-5d, the equivalencies shall be based on the institution's commonly accepted educational expenses defined by Bylaw 6-1, not the cost-of-attendance figure defined by NCAA Constitution 3-1-(g)-(1) as listed on Form 88-5d. Questions concerning the 1988-89 squad lists should be directed to John H. Leavens, director of compliance services, at the NCAA national office.

This material was provided by the NCAA legislative services department as an aid to member institutions. If an institution has a question it would like to have answered in this column, the question should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director for legislative services, at the NCAA national office.

21 schools lose championships eligibility under new bylaw

Recent legislation creating a "restricted-membership" category for NCAA member institutions that fail to comply with scheduling or minimum sports-sponsorship requirements resulted in 21 schools losing their eligibility for championships during 1988-89.

The legislation, which was adopted at the 1988 Convention, eliminated a one-year-old provision that would have allowed many of those schools to serve a one-year probation before losing eligibility for championships.

The 21 restricted members include 14—seven in Division I, four in Division II and three in Division III—that are ineligible for all men's and women's championships because they did not attract enough participants in one or more sports or sponsor enough sports.

News reports have appeared nationally about at least two of the restricted members in Division I—Creighton University, which had insufficient participation during 1987-88 in men's and women's golf and women's swimming, and St. Joseph's University (Pennsylvania), which did not meet participation requirements in women's indoor and outdoor track.

Also, six schools—one in I, two in II and three in III—are ineligible for championships in men's basketball after failing to comply with division scheduling requirements, as is one Division II school in football.

The new restricted-membership category as defined in Bylaw 10-1-(f) is similar to the old "unclassified" category. In addition to losing eligibility for championships, restricted members are permitted to vote only on constitutional issues at NCAA Conventions, and they are subject to the Association's enforcement procedure.

Member institutions that are restricted in all sports have one year to bring their programs back into compliance with division requirements. Failure to do so can result in such institutions being transferred to corresponding-membership status.

Not unusual

The number of schools placed in restricted membership this year is not out of line with numbers previously labeled unclassified and represent a small percentage of the NCAA's 801 active member institutions, said Shirley Whitacre, NCAA membership coordinator.

Last year, 15 schools (13 in Division I and two in Division II) held probationary status and another four institutions were unclassified in specific sports. Had the short-lived probation classification not been adopted by the 1987 Convention, those 19 schools could have been unclassified.

Supporters of the 1987 legislation creating the probationary period argued that ineligibility for an entire sports program is too severe a penalty in instances where a school is unable to meet sponsorship or participation requirements. Those supporters said such failures to comply often were due to unforeseen circumstances.

Following adoption of the probationary period, the new NCAA Committee on Review and Planning began to review several membership-classification issues, including Bylaw 10-1-(f).

The committee subsequently asked the NCAA Council to sponsor the 1988 legislation that eliminated the probationary period for sports sponsorship and created the restricted-membership classification. Speaking for the proposal at the 1988 Convention, committee chair and former NCAA President John R. Davis said its purpose was to prevent a school unable or unwilling to consistently meet sponsorship and participation requirements from failing "to meet the division requirement every other year and never suffer from it in any manner."

Delegates to the Convention adopted the restricted-membership classification by votes of 142-136 in Division I, 67-64 in Division II and 99-76 in Division III. Later, a motion to reconsider failed.

Compliance monitored

The Association's national office staff regularly monitors member institutions' compliance with scheduling and sports sponsorship requirements and often is able to alert schools about problems before they result in restricted membership, Whitacre said.

For instance, schedules for football and men's basketball in all divisions and for Division I women's basketball are checked for compliance each season. In addition, member institutions annually submit a sports sponsorship form, which permits the staff to check on sponsorship compliance.

The staff also randomly selects about 100 schools annually for the purpose of checking compliance with division membership criteria, including the minimum-participation requirement, Whitacre said.

As a result of the monitoring program, approximately 400 letters are mailed annually to member institutions inquiring about apparent scheduling, sponsorship or participation problems. Whitacre believes those efforts help keep to a minimum the number of schools that face restricted membership.

Member institutions placed in restricted membership may apply for a waiver of the requirements of Bylaw 10-1-(f). Of the 21 schools placed in the category this year, eight are requesting the waiver—five in Division I, two in Division II and one in Division III.

The waiver can be granted by a majority vote of the appropriate division's membership at the 1989 Convention.

Waivers also are available through the NCAA Council in certain situations that are regarded as being beyond the control of the member institution—for instance, when a meet or a game is canceled and substitute competition cannot be arranged.

Johnson named to NCAA post

Stanley D. Johnson joined the national office staff October 3 as director of professional development in the administration department.

Johnson earned an undergraduate degree in business administration from Kansas Wesleyan University and is pursuing an MBA at the University of Missouri, Kansas City.

For the past seven years, he has been associated with Inroads, Inc., of Kansas City, Missouri. He has served as that company's coordinator of corporate affairs and, most recently, as managing director.

In his new position, Johnson's responsibilities will include administration of the Association's opportunity-enhancement programs for ethnic minorities and women.

NCAA distributing booklet about alcohol to freshmen

College freshmen across the country are receiving a booklet from the NCAA this fall about alcohol abuse.

The Association supplied 400,000 copies of the booklet, "News About Booze," to be included in orientation packets that are being provided to incoming freshmen by Host Communications, Inc. It is the NCAA's second year of involvement in the orientation-packet project.

The booklet was developed and produced by Hazelden Health Promotion Services of Minneapolis, a nonprofit organization providing information and consultation on chemical dependency.

The 20-page pamphlet addresses prevention, symptoms, consequences and treatment of alcohol abuse on campus. A preface provided by the NCAA expresses the Association's concern that drug and alcohol abuse occurs not only among student-athletes, but throughout the entire college population.

The authors, Bruce B. Roberts and Howard I. Thorsheim, hold faculty positions in the department of psychology at St. Olaf College.

Among the facts reported in "News About Booze" are that over 70 percent of college students drink on occasion and that most property damage and conflicts between students on a college campus are caused by overindulgence in alcohol.

Roberts and Thorsheim told Nancy Conner of the St. Paul Pioneer Post-Dispatch that friendships and involvement in campus activities could prevent chemical-dependency problems that occur during college years by easing normal stress.

"For college students, that means to become involved in almost any activity and be real contributors and feel what they are doing is important," said Roberts. "It helps our own sense of identity and esteem, and I think it helps create for us a better sense of being able to act on our values."

NACDA schedules seminars on legal issues in athletics

Legal issues facing college athletics administrators have prompted the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics to organize and schedule three regional sports-law seminars, beginning November 29-30 at the Providence Marriott. The Community College of Rhode Island is the host.

The seminars will be conducted by Glenn Wong, a NACDA Management Institute instructor from the University of Massachusetts.

Joins conference

The College of Mount St. Vincent has joined the Independent Athletic Conference.

The Dolphins, under athletics director Chuck Mancuso, will field five teams that will compete in the conference in 1989-90. The teams are men's and women's tennis, women's volleyball, and men's basketball. The cross country team will participate in this fall's championship. Plans for men's soccer are also under way.

TV pact signed

Central Connecticut State University, through WTWS-TV, will provide basketball fans with live television coverage of 10 selected men's basketball home contests.

"We hope this will introduce our basketball program to more people in the state," said Judith Davidson, athletics director. First on the schedule is the December 8 game with Wagner.

WTWS reaches more than 100,000 households in Connecticut and Rhode Island over cable systems and regular antenna.

Amherst.

Topics to be covered include legal challenges to drug testing, Title IX and sex discrimination, tort liability and risk management, player-agent issues, contract law, and NCAA litigation.

Other seminars are scheduled December 5-6 at the New Orleans Hyatt, with the University of New Orleans as host, and December 15-16 at the San Diego Marriott, with San Diego State University as host.

The seminars are funded by a grant from the NACDA Foundation.

As a bonus for those attending the New Orleans seminar, NACDA will provide free admission to the athletics business conference December 7-8, also scheduled at the New Orleans Hyatt.

Redbirds on radio

WJBC Radio in Bloomington and Illinois State University have agreed to a four-year contract for the broadcasting of Redbird football and men's basketball games.

WJBC has broadcast Redbird football and basketball games for more than 25 years.

The contract is retroactive to the start of the 1988 football season and, in addition to providing WJBC exclusive broadcast origination rights, it also provides for expansion of broadcast coverage of Illinois State games into a network.

Graduation-rate data vital to student-athlete's future

By Sen. Bill Bradley
Democrat, New Jersey

Imagine that you are an extremely talented high school athlete.

Hundreds of colleges have contacted you, and 50 or 100 coaches have come to see you play.

Most of these coaches come peddling dreams of "the big time," and they all tell you what a big contribution you will make to their team.

You're realistic enough to temper your dreams of a professional career with the recognition that you should use your college scholarship to get an education. Many of the recruiters will talk about how much they care about the academic life of their athletes, but, unfortunately, not all will mean what they say.

How will you know?

Sen. Bill Bradley

Some schools do an outstanding job of helping students balance their academic and athletics commitments. A few of their students may make it to the pros, but nearly all will graduate.

As students and parents sort through dozens of scholarship offers, they want to know which schools make a commitment to the academic lives of their students.

Knowing the graduation rate for students who enter a particular school on an athletics scholarship certainly provides a good indication. This is especially true if this information is provided for each sport and if it is clear whether the students are following a range of academic interests or are funneled through one or two hopelessly easy majors.

This kind of information is essential for the committed student-athlete to make a reasonable decision about the future.

Reps. Ed Towns and Tom McMillen and I have introduced legislation to require schools to provide this information to prospective student-athletes. All the bill does is require schools to acknowledge publicly their commitment to a balance between academics and athletics.

Unfortunately, critics of the bill have paraded out a list of petty objections about the burden of paperwork and assertions that the problem is confined to a small percentage of "big-time" colleges.

The reality is, we don't know how big the problem is. Without information, it's impossible to determine whether the problem is in fact confined to a small number of colleges.

Some say that higher education should police itself. I agree that would be ideal, but, unfortunately, schools have thus far proven that they are not up to the job.

Those who argue that government shouldn't be involved in such matters doubtlessly forget that the NCAA was established at the behest of Teddy Roosevelt because he believed that college athletics had to be regulated. Unfortunately, it seems the watchdog has been co-opted by those it was assigned to watch.

Colleges coaches and college athletics programs must be accountable for the job they do. And by this, I do not mean accountable to the government but rather to the young men and women who entrust their futures to them.

These comments were excerpted from an article written for Scripps Howard News Service.

Public likes sports gambling; efforts to stop it are useless

By Roger Stanton, publisher
Football News
Excerpted from an editorial

Millions of college and pro football fans are in the habit of wagering with their friendly bookmakers each week. After getting the "official line" from Las Vegas, others bet among themselves.

What's surprising is the number of head football coaches who privately bet on college and pro games that don't involve their teams. Those in the law-enforcement business, of all people, have been known to bet on football games, too.

As I have said before, both college football and the NFL greatly benefit from the large segment of fans who regularly bet on games. This increases attendance and adds to the overall television ratings. Of course, no person in football has ever condoned sports gambling, but they aren't protesting very loudly either.

The NFL wisely takes a sort of "accepting the situation" attitude. It certainly doesn't want its players or anyone connected with the league betting on games. The NFL forbids its players from associating with known gamblers and works very hard to enforce such a policy. The league also checks the official odds each week to make sure that there are no unexplained abrupt changes. But beyond that, the NFL people agree there isn't much they can do.

"There have been a few rare point-shaving incidents in college basketball over the past 40 years... and whenever someone mentions gambling, this is brought up. That inherent danger is always there, but the overall record of college sports is more honest than almost any segment of American society."

The NCAA has a special gambling-awareness committee. This committee would like to do away with all sports gambling.

A few years ago, the NCAA asked the media to stop publishing football odds and each week's official line. It was turned down flat by a whopping 98 percent of the press. The NCAA doesn't approve of any publication that carries prediction service ads. This obviously includes Football News. But now you even see these ads in many daily newspapers.

There have been a few rare point-shaving incidents in college basketball over the last 40 years (Iulane being the most recent); and whenever someone mentions gambling, this is brought up. That inherent danger is always there, but the overall record of college sports is more honest than almost any segment of American society.

Every year, there are some token arrests and raids by law-enforcement officials against known sports bookmakers. But they are quickly forgotten. It would take an army of law-enforcement people to put even a small dent in the huge sports gambling business as it exists today.

A large segment of the people in this country express a strong desire to do something that is officially illegal, as long as it does no harm to anyone else. The police recognize that there is little they can do about America's infatuation with sports gambling.

The Chicago Sun Times asked its readers recently, "Should we legalized sports gambling?" About half the responses were affirmative. But it won't happen.

Things will remain status quo as millions of Americans enjoy the pleasure of betting on their favorite football team and giving or taking points. It is and will be the national pastime for many football fans each fall.

Women should take initiative on jobs

Judy George, faculty member and coach
DePauw University

"It is time women refuse to be satisfied with token coaching jobs and administrative morsels. The 'old boys' will not step aside for women to replenish their athletics leadership pool.

"Women must help themselves by dedicating their talents and upholding the cause of women's place in the leadership of sport.

"Moreover, they must develop support for female sport leadership in their local communities and work with athletics directors, administrations, service and professional organizations to bring about needed changes.

"Women should not hesitate to cause a stir in athletics circles. They need to follow the example of the black coaches association and use a consolidated female network to help each other find jobs and serve as a pressure group for the recognition of women coaches.

"They must be willing to use lawsuits, affirmative action and boycotts to protest discrimination. They must become impossible to ignore. It is time for women to leave the stands and sit on the bench."

"I hope that not only the image but the reality of the (Southwest Athletic) conference will improve.

"Schools must learn that they have to stop cheating. I hope we can move on from this type of thing.

"It is just an epidemic type of thing, and coaches are so concerned with winning and end up looking the other way. I think the administration is partly to blame, because they put so much pressure on the coaches to win and overlook illegal activities.

"We have to deal with the reality of what is actually taking place by staying within the rules."

"It's all done by computer (a plan to determine the top two I-A football teams after the postseason bowls).

"A team gets so many points for how many games it wins. Then, it gets points for how many games its opponents win and how many games its opponents' opponents win. For example, if you beat Nebraska, you get points for its wins and its opponents' wins. No points will be awarded for playing teams that aren't Division I.

"With this system, you have a better idea of the top teams. You'll find people trying to play a better schedule.

"Perhaps 12-0 doesn't win the national title.

"The bowl games are great. I've never been to a bad one that we haven't won. I think this system would enhance the bowls. People would be watching to see who the two finalists will be. Then, you'd have a true national champion (after a national-championship game)."

When SMU officials speak, everyone should be listening

By Dan Langendorf

Excerpted from a column

When people first hear about it, they snicker. It's hard not to see some irony in the situation. A South-

Detection of steroids improving

By Darrell Christian

Scratch another "safe" steroid from the sports scene.

Ben Johnson in all likelihood took the popular pills called stanozolol with him into track exile.

Johnson, the world's most infamous fastest human, wasn't the first Olympian in Seoul to be caught using the steroid, but he was the one who blew the cover.

He was stripped of his gold medal and world record in the 100-meter dash after traces of the drug were found in his postrace urine sample.

And that, says the chief medical officer of the U.S. Olympic Committee, should be enough to convince athletes once and for all that stanozolol is not the undetectable steroid they might have thought it was.

"It has been in the past. It isn't anymore," said Dr. Robert Voy. "It's like the rest of them. It was difficult (to detect) up to a year and a half ago. Now, it's easy to find, and we're finding more of it."

"This will end stanozolol."

Stanozolol is a water-based steroid taken orally that, according to a U.S. Olympic Committee brochure, stays in the body up to six weeks, not the eight months for fat-soluble types that are injected.

That made it in particular favor with athletes who wanted an extra edge and thought they could fool Olympic laboratories.

"It increased muscle mass and muscle strength," Voy said. "Big muscles make faster muscles."

In Johnson's case, it was fast enough to run the 100 in a blurring 9.79 seconds, four-hundredths of a second off his old world record.

"We've seen about 15 positive cases of this drug in the last two or three years," said Dr. Robert Dugal, a Canadian member of the IOC medical commission who runs the IOC-accredited lab set up for the Montreal Olympics in 1976.

Stanozolol is the generic name; examples listed by the USOC include Winstrol and Stroma.

Manufactured in the United States and several European countries, it is a prescription drug that Dugal said should be used medically in "very, very specific cases of one or two types of anemia."

"It is one of the most dangerous anabolic steroids because its effects can lead to a number of disturbances of the liver, including cancer," Dugal said.

"Science makes progress; and day after day, we are able to close the gap," said Alexander de Merode, the Belgian who is chair of the IOC medical commission.

That doesn't mean there won't be another secret steroid to come along, but Voy said the drug detectives are "getting ahead of the game as far as methods of testing."

"It's a message to athletes they cannot fool around regardless of what their gurus tell them," Voy said.

ern Methodist University football coach was recently named to an ethics committee.

Initial reactions went something like: "You've got to be kidding. SMU broke every rule in the book. What do they know about ethics?"

But at second glance, head coach Forrest Gregg's appointment to the ethics committee of the American Football Coaches Association should help SMU and college football in general.

The committee consists of nine coaches who serve as a peer review board, monitoring the behavior of coaches and their understanding of NCAA rules.

"Who can better relate the trouble you can get into than Forrest Gregg?" said Charles McClendon, executive director of the AFCA. "He's the one rebuilding a program. Nobody has ever rebuilt a program before. He could become one of the committee's most important members."

SMU received the NCAA's so-called death penalty in 1986 for repeated rule violations, including a highly publicized pay-for-play scandal. The NCAA suspended SMU's 1987 season, and the university can-derstands the keep-it-all-in-perspective days of the 1950s when there was still a sense of balance between athletics and academics. He also knows about professionalism, since he coached in the NFL for 11 seasons, and what it takes to rebuild a program from the ashes.

"I haven't done anything yet," Gregg said. "But I thought it was interesting they would have me on it. I do have a good perspective."

SMU athletics director Doug Single also says Gregg's appointment is good for the university. It shows the Mustangs are not being treated as social outcasts; their opinions and experiences are valuable.

"We want to take a leadership position in our conference and in the organizations," Single said. "Not only can we be in a position to influence, we can also offer some insight on things others don't see as a result of our problems. I think people want to have us because we have experienced what others can only imagine."

California teams note 5-1-(j) effects

"It's going to be a good year for community college football in terms of quality and caliber of play," says Tom Martinez, president of the California Community College Football Coaches Association and head football coach at College of San Mateo College.

With the implementation of NCAA Bylaw 5-1-(j), community college football coaches statewide are experiencing an increase in the athletics skill level of student-athletes.

"Due to Proposition 48, more Division I athletes are available, and California's community college football teams are going to reflect that talent," said Don Odishoo, football coach at Merced College.

Those football players declared ineligible under Proposition 48 are attending community colleges in increasing numbers, according to a news release from the California Association of Community Colleges.

"The quality of athlete and talent level of community college football has been elevated since the passage of Proposition 48. We are seeing more and more Division I non-qualifiers come through the doors," said Sonny Stupek, Shasta College coach.

Those student-athletes who are declared ineligible for Division I-level play and choose to attend a California community college are strongly encouraged to achieve their associate degrees and transfer units to Division I schools to continue their athletics careers, the association release said.

Hal Sherbeck of Fullerton College said, "Just about all of our football players who were Division I nonqualifiers have achieved their two-year degrees and are now successfully attending and competing at four-year colleges."

Big West signs pact with ESPN

The Big West Conference, in association with Creative Sports Marketing, Inc., has reached a multiyear basketball agreement with ESPN. Commissioner James Haney has announced.

Big West teams will appear in at least 10 games on ESPN. The schedule includes five conference games, four of which will be telecast in February on ESPN's Big Monday lineup.

"The Big West had three teams in the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship last season, and we feel the conference will greatly complement ESPN's college basketball coverage," said Loren Matthews, ESPN vice-president of programming.

The University of Nevada, Las Vegas, is scheduled to appear in five games, and the University of California, Santa Barbara, will be in four televised games. Utah State University is scheduled for two appearances and California State University, Long Beach, and the University of California, Irvine, will appear in one game each.

ESPN will televise portions of the Maui Classic in November and will telecast the conference's tournament championship game March 11.

Mansfield to recreate night football game of '92

Al and Frank and Dan and the other boys of Monday night pro football owe more than they know to the unheralded football teams that clashed on a cold autumn evening 96 years ago September 28.

On that night in 1892, Mansfield State Normal School and Wyoming Seminary battled to a scoreless tie in a game remarkable only because for the first time—the players tangled beneath artificial lights.

Such were the humble beginnings of night football in America. The first professional football game would not be played for another decade, in 1902, in Elmira, New York.

"The lighting was so poor, the game (between Mansfield and Wyoming Seminary) had to be stopped at half time. The players couldn't even see each other's numbers," Steve McCloskey, sports information director at Mansfield University, told United Press International.

The NCAA Division II school plans to commemorate its role in night football by recreating the 1892

"But the lighting proved inadequate... visibility was so poor players were often unaware of which squad had the ball, and anyone in a uniform was likely to be tackled."

game later this fall. McCloskey said Mansfield hopes to make the game an annual event in preparation for a major centennial observance in 1992.

The game between Mansfield and Wyoming Seminary, a Wilkes-Barre area prep school, was played on a Wednesday evening in Smythe Park as part of the annual Mansfield Fair.

For the historic contest, 20 electric lights of 2,000-candle-power each and several 30-candle-power lights were strung in front of the grandstand, powered by a generator.

But the lighting proved inadequate. According to contemporary accounts, visibility was so poor players were often unaware of which squad had the ball, and anyone in a uniform was likely to be tackled.

At half time, with the score 0-0 but with Mansfield in possession of the football, the captains of both teams decided it would be "inconvenient to continue" and declared the game a draw.

Mansfield did not play another night game until 1946, when its opponent was again Wyoming Seminary. Night football is still a rare event for the school, which has no lights at its campus playing field.

McCloskey said Mansfield would recreate the game at the original Smythe Park field using teams from two fraternities. Automobile headlights probably will be used to approximate the original lighting, although steps will be taken to ensure it is adequate for play.

The game will be played under 1892 rules, with some modifications, McCloskey said. Because of safety considerations, the flying wedge, for example, will be banned.

"And they won't be allowed to pick up the ball carrier and throw him over the line to gain yardage as they used to in those days," he said.

Kellogg served from 1966 to 1978 as Regis' athletics director.

CORRECTIONS

A story concerning catastrophic-injury insurance for NCAA member institutions that appeared in the September 26 issue of The NCAA News should have specified that the Association pays 100 percent of premium costs for participants in men's and women's basketball and 50 percent of costs for participants in other sports in Division I only. Funds provided by the NCAA Executive Committee are used specifically to offset insurance costs for Division I institutions, although Divisions II and III insurance rates have been reduced as an indirect result of the funding.

The summary of NCAA Executive Committee actions that appeared in the September 12 issue of The NCAA News erroneously reported the year in which four sites will host Division I Men's Basketball Championship regionals. The sites will host the regionals in 1991. They are: East—Meadowlands Arena, East Rutherford, New Jersey (Rutgers University, New Brunswick, host), March 22 and 24; Southeast—Charlotte Coliseum, Charlotte, North Carolina (University of North Carolina, Charlotte, host), March 21 and 23; Midwest—Pontiac Silverdome, Pontiac, Michigan (University of Detroit host), March 22 and 24; West—Kingdome, Seattle, Washington (University of Washington host), March 21 and 23.

Pac-10 rolling over nonconference opposition (23-4)

By Jim Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

The Pacific-10 Conference, with an amazing 23-4 record against outside Division I-A opponents through October 1, seems certain to end the streak of five straight national nonconference titles by the Southeastern Conference.

The Pac-10's .852 winning percentage against outsiders is almost 100 points above the decade high of .755 by the SEC in 1985. The Eastern independents are a distant second at 12-6 (.667).

Only four outside games with I-A opponents remain for Pac-10 teams — Stanford vs. San Jose State October 8, California vs. Temple October 22, Southern California vs. Notre Dame November 26 and Oregon vs. Hawaii December 3.

Just one more victory would leave the Pac-10 at 24-7 (.774) entering the bowls, which do count in the nonconference compilations. In 1986, the SEC needed the bowls to edge the Pac-10 for the title. In 1985, the SEC needed its decade high to edge the Big Ten Conference, which had its best record in 24 years.

The Pac-10 won in 1982, then the SEC started its five-year streak. The Atlantic Coast Conference won in 1981 and the SEC in 1980.

SEC at 9-8

The SEC is no better than seventh at 9-8 (.529) through October 1. It has 16 more games with outside I-A foes in the regular season, so the potential is there for a gaudy 25-8 regular-season figure. More conference games now are required in the SEC, so it is playing fewer outside games. A year ago, the SEC played 55 outside I-A games, including bowls, and finished 36-17-2 (.673).

In third place through October 1 at 11-8 is a group we simply label "other independents." It includes Notre Dame, Cincinnati, Akron, Northern Illinois, Southwestern Louisiana and Tulsa — six teams.

Tied for fourth and fifth at 10-8 are the Southern independents and the Southwest Athletic Conference. Then come the Big Eight Conference at 15-13-1, the SEC, the Western Athletic Conference at 9-9, Big Ten 11-19-1, ACC 5-9, the Mid-American Athletic Conference 3-10 and the Big West Conference 3-19. At the end of last year, the WAC, now at .500, had a losing record, and the Pac-10 was .553.

All games against teams in Division I-AA are deleted in the nonconference compilation, because I-A teams annually win about 75 percent of such games. Through October 1, I-A teams had won 39 of 46 games against I-AA teams (.848). Games against Divisions II and III teams also are deleted, although I-A teams play only one or two such games a year.

Top to bottom

The Pac-10's winning record goes from top to bottom. Not one member has a losing record against outsiders. In contrast, the Big Eight's top four have lost just two games, while the bottom four have won only two. Only the Big Eight has challenged the Pac-10, with a 3-3 record. However, the Pac-10's three losses came to Nebraska, Oklahoma and Colorado, all in the top four of the Big Eight, while two of the Pac-10's three victories were UCLA over Nebraska and Southern Cal over Oklahoma, both by decisive scores.

Against all others, the Pac-10 stands 20-1, with the only loss by Stanford at Notre Dame. It is 7-0 vs. the Big West, 4-0 vs. both the Big Ten and WAC, 2-0 vs. Eastern independents, and 1-0 vs. the SWC, SEC

Purdue's Marc Foster leads Division I-A in interceptions with 1.50 per game and MAC.

Why look at the nonconference leaders now? Because most such games in most conferences now have been played, although the SEC and independents are only about half finished.

Remember, too, that this is a simple won-lost comparison. Nothing about the strength of the opposition is included (except to delete non-I-A foes).

I-AA leaders

The nonconference results always have been rather scrambled in Division I-AA, because some play several games against I-A teams; some few; some none, and the same is true against teams below I-AA, which are deleted in the compilation.

The best way to clear things up is to count only games against outside I-AA foes.

This shows the Yankee Conference on top at 8-2, followed by the Southland Conference at 9-3, Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference 5-2, Southern Conference 5-3, Big day taking his medical exams before the first home game. That night, he arrived at the stadium only 30 minutes before kickoff, dressed, taped and warmed up in 20 minutes; and in the second quarter, he scooped up a blocked punt and ran it 16 yards for his first collegiate touchdown. Simpson's Ian Grover, a junior from Naperville, Illinois, holds a perfect 4.000 grade-point average with a major in biology and a minor in math. The 6-4, 240-pounder, an offensive guard, has been a starter since his freshman year. (Steve Wilbur, Simpson SID)

Millsaps at .801

Millsaps, coached for many years by Harper Davis, has achieved a winning percentage of .801 in the 1980s (58-14-1), which ranks eighth in all of Division III. Millsaps was omitted from the division's top winners in the current decade, published in The NCAA News September 19. Entering this season, Davis

Mankato State's football team had a memorable three-day trip to El Paso, and the least of it was not the game, a 37-3 loss to UTEP. The team met Vanna White at a shopping mall, and a big, four-color picture of the team with the television personality appeared in the El Paso Times that Sunday. But the big event was a trip across the border to Juarez, Mexico. Said coach Dan Runkle: "Most of our kids are from the upper Midwest, and five had never flown before. I don't want to get any letters, or knock the other side of the border, but when we got back, they started singing 'God Bless America.' It was an eye-opening experience." (Paul Allan, Mankato State SID)

Dat Ly had kicked a Division I-A record-tying five first-half field goals for New Mexico State to provide the margin in his team's first victory this season, 42-29, at Kansas. But he was not ecstatic: "It felt good because the team could use this. But it doesn't do me any great personal good. It's just something to read about. We won the game — that's all that really counts." That was perspective, not false modesty. His coach, Mike Knoll (the victory came on his 37th birthday), put it this way: "I think that after his family barely escaped alive from Vietnam... he has learned to face a little adversity."

Ly recalls well the day Saigon fell, though he was just 8 at the time, second youngest of 11 children. "There was panic, people screaming, running everywhere," he told Gib Twyman of The Kansas City Star. He remembers seeing balloons in the sky. "Why are there balloons falling on us, mother?" he asked. "Those aren't balloons," she told him. "They are bombs." His sister, who worked in the American embassy, had hurriedly helped arrange paperwork that got them in the airport. The Lys were on the last U.S. military plane filled with refugees to make it out of Saigon. Said Ly: "The last plane, the one behind us, was shot down by the Viet Cong."

The family immigrated to Minnesota, then Wichita, Kansas, where he played high school soccer. When Wichita State gave up football, strength coach Henry Sroka moved to New Mexico State, and Ly inquired about kicking for the Aggies.

Can you top these?

Holy Cross defeated Princeton, 30-26, September 24 by returning a kickoff for the winning points as time expired. It is the first game decided by a last-play kickoff return in Division I-AA history (this is its 11th season). The last one in I-A came in 1982, when California beat Stanford on that famous six-lateral play in which the Stanford band was involved.

Holy Cross tailback Darin Cromwell took the kickoff at his 24 and ran to his 42; as he was about to be tackled, he leaned forward and side-armed a lateral to tailback Tim Donovan, who ran the last 58 yards untouched. Said Donovan: "We practice that play. Darin knew where I was the whole time." Said coach Mark Duffner: "That play is called 'kickoff return touchdown' and it's part of our weekly preparation; but we could probably do it 100 times, and it never would work again. Has anyone in America ever seen a more exciting game?" (Jeff Nelson, Holy Cross SID)

East Texas State scored all nine of its touchdowns in the first four games on big plays — passes of 58, 14 and 22 yards in the first game, an 18-yard scramble by the quarterback and 21-yard pass in the second, a 77-yard run and 66-yard punt return in the third game, and passes of 44 and 73 in the fourth one. Can any team top that? (Matt Keifer, East Texas State SID)

Five of Northeast Louisiana's last six victories, going back to the Division I-AA quarterfinals last year, have been won or saved in the final minute of play. The latest was a 50-yard field goal by Derek White with 17 seconds left to beat Southwest Texas State, 29-27, September 17. The biggest was that pass interception by Perry Harper at 0:56 in the I-AA national-championship game to preserve a 43-42 victory over Marshall. (Bob Anderson, Northeast Louisiana SID)

According to the preseason formula used by the NCAA to determine strength of schedule, Washington (Missouri) in Division III is playing opponents with a combined winning percentage of .672 (59-28-3). Can any team in III top that? (Mike Wolf, Washington (Missouri) SID)

Football notes

Sky Conference 3-2, all I-AA independents 14-12, the Colonial League 6-6, Southwestern Athletic Conference 2-4-2, Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference 2-6-1, Ivy Group 3-8 and Ohio Valley Conference 4-13-1.

One I-AA independent, Louisiana Tech, has played only I-A opponents in its bid to join I-A, and it stands 2-2.

Adding I-A opponents to the equation, the Big Sky and Southland both are 2-4 vs. outside I-A foes, the Southern 2-7, all independents 1-10, Gateway 0-5, OVC 0-3, Yankee 0-3, Colonial 0-2 and Ivy 0-1. The SWAC and MEAC have played no I-A teams.

Top students

Arizona State might have the smartest inside linebacking tandem in Division I-A, with junior Mark Tingstad, a 3.490 student (4.000 scale) in business, and redshirt sophomore Drew Metcalf. Tingstad, from Spanaway, Washington, made the Pacific-10 Conference all-academic team the past two seasons. Metcalf, who stayed home in Tempe, is taking 22 hours this fall semester and will graduate with a degree in finance after this, his third year. He plans to earn his master's degree next year. He will be starting on his doctorate during his final season of football in 1990. (Mark Brand, Arizona State SID)

Weber State's Jeff Sorensen, a 3.800 student in premed, spent all ranked 11th in career victories at 131 among active Division III coaches.

Quotes of the week

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz on why he prefers competence to experience: "I don't want the kamikaze pilot who flew 54 different (suicide) missions. I want somebody who can get it right the first time."

Speaking of one-liners, Holtz said: "One of my all-time favorites was when I was an assistant under Woody Hayes at Ohio State, and we went to the West Coast for the Rose Bowl; Woody didn't trust the West Coast press, so he wouldn't talk to the writers. Jim Murray (Los Angeles Times) wrote that it didn't matter, anyway, because Woody was probably too busy out walking his pet rat."

Arizona State tight end Ryan McReynolds, a 6-7, 244-pound sophomore from Rowland Heights, California, traveled as one of 56 choir members to the Soviet Union last summer for two weeks and eight concerts. At an airport in Bucharest, a machine-gun-toting Romanian guard discovered some Bibles that McReynolds had hidden beneath a flap in the bottom of his suitcase. "I thought, God, this is it," said McReynolds. "I leave it up to you. Whatever happens, happens." The guard looked at one of the Bibles, printed in Russian, and allowed McReynolds to keep the Bibles, which he

U.S., Soviets will cooperate on Olympic antidrug effort

An Olympics that produced one of the biggest drug busts in sports history ended October 2 with an East-West agreement against doping.

As the Games ended with 10 athletes testing positive for drugs, the United States and the Soviet Union announced that they would join forces "to work toward the elimination of the use of drugs in sport," the Associated Press reported.

"It is essential that large national Olympic committees work closely together to eradicate the drug problem," said Robert Helmick, president of the U.S. Olympic Committee.

His Soviet counterpart, sports minister Marat Gramov, said "a vicious circle" of drug use surrounded sports.

"There is a lack of confidence that threatens the whole Olympic movement," he said.

Gramov contacted Helmick about a joint effort last June, following an International Olympic Committee-sponsored drug seminar in Ottawa, the USOC president said.

That was long before drugs cast their shadow over Seoul. Whatever the records set, this will be remembered as the place where the world's fastest human was caught from behind.

Ben Johnson, world record-holder in the 100 meters and fresh from an overpowering gold-medal performance, was thrown out of the Games after testing positive for muscle-building steroids.

Four other medals — two Bulgarian weightlifting golds, a Hungarian weightlifting silver and a British judo bronze — also were stripped for drugs, and five other nonmedalists tested positive for substances ranging from caffeine to diuretics.

A statement said the two Olympic committees would work on "a joint initiative...toward the elimination of the use of drugs in sports."

Business group wants school to start ice hockey program

The University of Wisconsin, Green Bay, has been asked to implement an NCAA Division I men's ice hockey program beginning in the 1991-92 season.

Bob Johnson, a former University of Wisconsin, Madison, hockey coach and current executive director of the Amateur Hockey Association, was among speakers presenting the proposal to Wisconsin-Green Bay administrators. The meeting followed a feasibility study by 15 Green Bay area businesses to develop the varsity program.

The university currently has no hockey program.

The report, which took three years to develop, proposes fielding the first team in 1991 under an estimated first-year budget of less than $400,000, United Press International reported.

Membership in either the Western Collegiate Hockey Association, which includes the Wisconsin Badgers, or the Central Collegiate Hockey Association would be possible, the group said.

Questions/Answers

Readers are invited to submit questions to this column. Please direct any inquiries to The NCAA News at the NCAA national office.

Q Does the NCAA administer an intern program at its member institutions and affiliated organizations?

A No. However, the NCAA Ethnic-Minority and Women's Enhancement Programs will incorporate these types of internships within the next two years. Currently, the NCAA only administers internships at the NCAA national office.

Cal-Berkeley's football grants reduced for rules violations

I. Introduction.

This case emanated from an attempt by the university's athletics recruiting coordinator during the summer of 1987 to establish academic eligibility for a junior college transfer student in order for the young man to compete in the sport of football at the university. This effort started a chain of events that escalated into very serious and major breaches of academic integrity, as well as recruiting and ethical-conduct violations of NCAA regulations by the recruiting coordinator. Monitoring and compliance programs at the university, however, immediately detected a possible effort to certify eligibility improperly, and the university, thereby, prevented the circumvention of NCAA and university eligibility requirements.

In the spring of 1987, the university recruited and admitted a junior college transfer student who had sufficient hours of transferable credit to be admitted to the university. However, it was subsequently determined by the faculty athletics representative that the student-athlete lacked the proper number of transferable hours to establish eligibility for athletics competition at the University of California, Berkeley, and the faculty athletics representative determined that the young man should not be certified eligible. This fact came to the attention of the athletics recruiting coordinator subsequent to the final date for enrolling the prospect in summer-session courses at the university or at a community college. Nonetheless, the recruiting coordinator arranged for the student to be enrolled in a community college located approximately two hours from the young man's home.

The recruiting coordinator arranged for the prospect's enrollment subsequent to the deadline for normal admission in a course taught by an instructor who also was a representative of the university's athletics interests. He prevailed on this instructor to award academic credit to the young man without requiring attendance or any academic work prior to receipt of a grade. He knowingly submitted a transcript to the University of California, Berkeley, that contained fraudulent academic credit, and he instructed the young man and another student-athlete to "cover up" by providing false information to the university concerning the matter.

As a result of the recruiting coordinator's actions, the university gained at least a temporary recruiting advantage in that the young man elected to enroll in the university, and he engaged in preseason football practice sessions while under the impression that he would be eligible for athletics competition. If the recruiting coordinator had not interceded in the matter, the young man may have enrolled in a different four-year institution where he could have been certified properly for immediate participation in football. The young man eventually did transfer to another institution, but not without losing the opportunity to compete immediately as a result of NCAA transfer rules.

Thus, this combination of actions by the recruiting coordinator not only had serious and avoidable consequences for the student-athlete, it also involved two serious violations of NCAA regulations—academic fraud and ethical conduct.

Fortunately, the University of California, Berkeley, had a compliance and eligibility certification program in place that detected this matter before the student-athlete engaged in competition. Because the faculty athletics representative reviews the academic record of every student-athlete at the university and certifies eligibility before competition, the faculty athletics representative initially ruled this student "not eligible." When the fraudulent credits were submitted to him, he immediately became suspicious, placed the student-athlete in the "not eligible" category, and notified the director of athletics and the head football coach of his concerns. Together, the faculty athletics representative, director of athletics and head football coach prevailed on the young man and another student-athlete who had become aware of the matter to reveal the full facts of this case.

The institution ruled the student-athlete ineligible for athletics competition at once, relieved the recruiting coordinator of his responsibilities and accepted his resignation, and then took steps to ensure that those at the community college involved in the generation of the fraudulent academic credits were disciplined by their own institution. The university immediately notified the Pacific-10 Conference, and an investigation was begun. In assessing its penalties, the conference noted both the seriousness of the violations and the effectiveness of the university's compliance and eligibility certification programs. The conference penalties: (a) limited the university to 28 initial and 93 total financial aid awards in football for the 1988-89 academic year, (b) required the university to "show cause" why the involved representative of the university's athletics interests should not be permanently disassociated from the university's athletics program, and (c) required a public announcement of the case.

The Committee on Infractions under NCAA Enforcement Procedure 2-(f) is empowered to accept the actions of an institution or conference as sufficient. Recognizing the same factors concerning the seriousness of the case and the effectiveness of the university's compliance programs, the committee voted to adopt the actions of the Pacific-10 Conference as the NCAA penalties in this case. In addition, the committee will notify the former recruiting coordinator that if he wishes to seek employment in an NCAA athletics program within the next five years, he will be required to appear before the Committee on Infractions concerning possible sanctions that would affect his employment duties for a designated period.

The Committee on Infractions found that an attempt, whether or not successful, to arrange for unearned academic credit for a prospective student-athlete or a student-athlete constitutes a major violation of NCAA legislation. Normally, such a violation would result in the member institution receiving a major penalty and becoming subject to jeopardy under the five-year-repeat-violator provision of the NCAA enforcement procedures. However, the committee determined that the actions of university academic and athletics administrators justified lesser penalties in this case.

The committee believes that the university's actions in this case were fully consistent with its membership responsibilities to ensure compliance with NCAA rules. The university uncovered the violations at an early stage and prevented a student-athlete from gaining eligibility improperly. The university immediately reported the matter to the Pacific-10 Conference and severed ties with the involved staff member. Such actions were considered to be significant mitigating factors in determining that the NCAA's major penalty provisions should not be applied in this case and in adopting the Pacific-10 Conference penalties.

II. Violations of NCAA legislation, as determined by committee.

A. [NCAA Constitution 3-1-(g)-(5) and 3-6-(a)-(1)-(ii)]

In the summer of 1987, a prospective student-athlete received unearned academic credits from a community college that were necessary to make him eligible for competition during the 1987 football season at the university; further, enrollment in the courses, which resulted in these credits, was arranged by the university's athletics recruiting coordinator, and the credits were arranged and provided by a representative of the university's athletics interests who was an instructor in the community college district; further, the prospect received credit without paying the enrollment fees for the courses, completing any class work or attending any class sessions; further, in August 1987, the athletics recruiting coordinator was knowingly involved in the submission of a transcript to the university that included unearned academic credits for the purpose of determining eligibility for the student-athlete despite the recruiting coordinator's knowledge that the transcript was fraudulent, and finally, he transported the student-athlete to the community college on one occasion in order to obtain the transcript in question.

B. [NCAA Constitution 3-6-(a)-(1)-(iv)]

In late August and early September 1987, the university's athletics recruiting coordinator attempted to prevent university authorities from learning of the ineligibility of a student-athlete by instructing the young man and another student-athlete to provide false information to university authorities.

III. Committee on Infractions penalties.

A. In accordance with actions taken by the Pacific-10 Conference and adopted by the NCAA Committee on Infractions, the University of California, Berkeley, shall be limited to a maximum of 28 initial and 93 total grants-in-aid in the sport of football for the 1988-89 academic year. [NOTE: The NCAA penalties in this case are not considered to be "major" penalties and the NCAA's five-year time period regarding repeat major infractions cases is not applicable to this case.]

B. Consistent with the provisions of Section 7-(b)-(12)-(i) of the Official Procedure Governing the NCAA Enforcement Program, the university has taken action to disassociate one representative of the university's athletics interests from the university's intercollegiate athletics program due to this individual's involvement in this case.

C. The former university athletics recruiting coordinator shall be informed in writing by the NCAA that in the event he attempts to become employed as an athletics department staff member at an NCAA member institution during the next five-year period (August 14, 1988, to August 14, 1993), he shall be required to appear before the Committee on Infractions in order to assess whether NCAA penalties should limit his employment duties at such an institution for a period to be designated by the committee.

Hanging in there

Henry "The Bull" Del Toro, a Norfolk, Virginia, disc jockey, suspended himself from a goal post at Foreman Field for 16 hours recently to help Old Dominion University sell season football tickets. Old Dominion is spearheading an effort to establish an NCAA Division I-AAA for football, and the school hopes to begin play in 1990. The stunt helped the athletics department sell 99 season tickets.

Baseball Committee relinquishes its role as equipment arbitrator

No longer will the NCAA Baseball Committee shoulder the responsibility of approving or disapproving playing equipment for use in intercollegiate competition.

During its September 22 telephone conference, the Administrative Committee approved the Baseball Committee's recommendation that it be absolved of responsibility for testing, approving or disapproving playing equipment for use in intercollegiate baseball.

The two key issues, said Gene A. McArtor, head men's baseball coach at the University of Missouri, Columbia, and chair of the Baseball Committee, are safety and performance of playing equipment.

"The NCAA Baseball Committee always has been concerned with safety as well as the performance of equipment in the game," said McArtor. "The new policy still expresses that concern."

"But because of the committee's lack of technical expertise in approving or disapproving playing equipment, it will rely on manufacturers to produce equipment that is safe and does not threaten the integrity of the game."

In some cases, the committee will establish performance guidelines to assist the manufacturers in the production of playing equipment.

The following statement, approved by the Association's legal counsel, will be added to the 1989 NCAA Baseball Rules in the section dealing with equipment:

"The NCAA Baseball Committee is responsible for developing policies and procedures governing the administration and conduct of championships, as well as formulating the official playing rules for the sport. The committee is not responsible for testing or approving playing equipment for use in intercollegiate baseball."

"Equipment manufacturers have undertaken the responsibility for the development of playing equipment that meets the size and weight specifications established from time to time by the committee. The NCAA urges manufacturers to work with the various independent testing agencies (e.g., National Operating Committee on Standards for Athletic Equipment, Hockey Equipment Certification Council, American Society for Testing and Materials) to produce safe products. Neither the NCAA nor the NCAA Baseball Committee certifies the safety of any baseball equipment. Only equipment that meets the weight and size dimensions specified in the NCAA Baseball Rules may be used in intercollegiate competition."

"While the committee does not regulate the development of new equipment and does not set technical or scientific standards for testing equipment or the approval or disapproval of specific playing equipment, the committee may from time to time provide manufacturers with informal guidelines as to the equipment performance levels it considers consistent with the integrity of the game. The committee reserves the right to intercede in order to maintain the integrity of the game."

Jess Heald, president of Worth

Sports Co., said he was pleased with the committee's decision.

"I think the NCAA has taken a very responsible position. We share in that position to preserve and protect the integrity of the game."

Heald's comments come after his company devoted five years to developing the first graphite composite bat (TRX-1), which recently was approved for use in NCAA competition. "We are very pleased to culminate a five-year project and excited to see a bat with brand new technology in use," he said.

The threat of gimmick products, specifically bats, is an issue the committee still is likely to confront.

Heald said a number of gimmick bats are either on the market or in production, including a water-filled bat, a three-sided bat and a bat with holes through it.

Innovation, however, has its place, he said.

"We would like to continue to be innovative. We hope our innovative equipment improves the quality of the game and increases participation in the sport."

"The aluminum bat is a classic example of how innovative equipment has helped the game of baseball. We hope the graphite bat will have the same effect on the game."

Heald said it is important to establish guidelines to help preserve the integrity of the game but not restrict the manufacturers from innovations that may help participants in the game.

He added, "I think the NCAA has taken a nice step toward preserving that balance."

Billboard displays in stadium boost Cowboys' revenues

A picture may be worth 1,000 words, but for Oklahoma State University, billboards at Lewis Stadium are worth thousands of dollars.

Oklahoma State's athletics department has completed a major advertising-display project that will net the department close to $95,000 in cash, goods and services.

"To be quite honest, the response to this project has been overwhelming," said Joe Muller, director of athletics marketing and promotions. "When we started back in May, our idea was to sell six or eight boards. But the more we became involved with the project, the more we could see there was a very real need for this type of advertising. We have sold all available advertising space in the stadium."

Initially, Muller developed an advertising package designed to encourage new business and ease the tension of a possible budget deficit in athletics. "We looked for major corporations and businesses throughout the state that were financially sound and yet had not been contributing to OSU athletics," he explained.

Presented to advertisers was a $5,500 package that included a 6-foot-by-15-foot billboard in the stadium, ads in all Cowboy football programs, scoreboard announcements during each home game and messages on the university message center through the end of the year.

"This is the first time an advertising project of this nature has been attempted at Oklahoma State," Muller offered, "and after seeing the response from advertisers, I really believe we've just scratched the surface in terms of future sponsorship possibilities."

Bowie State University and Morgan State University faced off October 1 in the second annual Jiffy Lube Classic football game, which was held on the campus of the University of Maryland, Baltimore County. The first event, held in 1987, involved Bowie State and California University of Pennsylvania.

"It has always been my philosophy that our company and franchisees give something back to their local communities," said W. J. Hindman, chairman and CEO of Jiffy Lube International. "This program is just one example of the kinds of efforts I encourage all of our local Jiffy Lube service centers to become involved in."

All proceeds from the game were donated to the participating schools for use in providing athletics scholarships.

Trivia Time: Who was the last football player from a Big Eight Conference school to lead the nation in total offense? Answer later.

Apologies to Michael Shepherd, the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, football player whose rod-and-reel catch of an alligator was erroneously recounted in the Briefly in the News column published in the September 19 issue of The NCAA News.

In an item about Shepherd's childhood fishing encounter with a gator, the Arkansas student-athlete was quoted as saying "the alligator was in a small house behind our lake." James F. Wright, NCAA assistant director of communications, saw the obviously transposed words. "Was he renting," asked Wright, "or paying off a mortgage?"

Applications are being accepted from Jewish athletes interested in trying out for the U.S. men's and women's volleyball teams that will compete next year in the 13th Maccabiah Games in Israel. The games are an Olympic-style competition conducted every four years for Jewish athletes from around the world.

Men's and women's volleyball tryouts will be held January 8, 1989, at the University of California, Los Angeles, and

Briefly in the News

January 15 at Villanova University. Participants need attend only one of the sessions.

Set to coach the American men's team is Doug Beal, who coached the 1984 U.S. Olympic team. Assisting him will be Sue Gozansky of the University of California, Riverside. Utah State University's Steve Carlat has been named head coach of the women's team. Assisting him will be Lynn Kranzberg, who played in the 1981 Maccabiah Games.

Applications for the tryouts are available from the United States Committee Sports For Israel, 275 South 19th Street, Suite 1203, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19103 (telephone 215/546-4700). They must be received by the USCISFI by early December.

Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference Commissioner Kenneth A. Free has announced that 137 student-athletes were named 1987-88 MEAC all-academic athletes after earning grade-point averages of at least 3.000 (4.000 scale) for the year.

Florida A&M University football player Irvin Clark (freshman political science major) and North Carolina A&T State University baseball player Thomas Keefer (junior chemical engineering major) tied for highest individual honors with 3.880s. The top female student-athlete was Lynn Webb, a freshman mathematics major and women's volleyball player at Morgan State University. She posted a 3.800 for the year.

Free noted that Howard University and Florida A&M each had 28 student-athletes named tops among league members. North Carolina A&T had 26, and Morgan State had 24.

Chinese soccer fans take their matches as seriously as the players, a group of Colorado College soccer players learned during a three-week tour of the People's Republic of China last June.

Almost 1,500 fans showed up for one game with firecrackers, bugles, horns and entire bands. "It was difficult for our players to concentrate on the game with the July 4th-type celebrations going off in the stands," said Horst Richardson, Colorado College soccer coach.

His charges came out with an 0-4-1 record in exhibition games against Chinese university, physical education and technical school teams.

Before dismissing the impact of cable TV channels like MTV and VH-1, note that Vanderbilt University has produced a music video for football player Eric Jones, who is being pushed as a Heisman Trophy candidate.

"The video was fun," Jones told The New York Times. "It was comforting because I knew all the people. It wasn't (produced) in a big studio with fill-ins. Some of the guys on the team were even in it."

One might expect a video like this from a school in Southern California, New York City, Atlantic City or Las Vegas—not from Vanderbilt, which is known more for academics than athletics or "Hollywood-style" publicity campaigns.

Just as unexpected to some people might be the unique listing under players of the week in football news releases from the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

Included in the September 19 package that previewed the Rebels' football contest with Ohio University was the announcement that Don Roberts and Ken Rogers had been named scholar-athletes of the week. Roberts earned improved grades in some courses during an early season off-week in the UNLV schedule. Rogers notched three perfect scores in English class and had perfect attendance in class and study hall.

Trivia Answer: Iowa State University's Dave Hoppmann, then a junior, won the 1961 total-offense crown with 1,638 yards on 320 plays. Since the NCAA statistics department switched in 1970 to rankings based on per-game averages instead of total yardage, no player from a Big Eight school has won the total-offense title.
